

CS171 Design Studio 3

Mychal Ceruti mceruti@g.harvard.edu

Feedback partner: Yash Patel (yashpatel@fas.harvard.edu)

Design Feedback

During my interview with Yash, he pointed out that while interesting, my goals may have been a bit ambitious for what would be expected from a one-man-team. After a short brainstorming session, we had come up with a solution that, while moving away from my original vision, would still achieve what I had set out to accomplish, namely a fun, engaging tool that would show the development of an actor or actors over a span of time in their career

Solutions

I am going to revise both the data structure and some major aspects of the visualization. Though it is rather “late in the game” the new implementation will be easier to achieve and should be just as interesting. Unfortunately this means my first milestone will be more sparse than I would like it to be.

Notes on Feedback

The quality of Yash's feedback was excellent. He took apart my design in a constructive fashion, and we had a short brainstorming session to come up with some workable solutions that will up the quality of the final product.